3. Grammar

Present Continuous with "always" / "constantly"

We normally use Present Continuous for actions happening right now or temporarily. However, it can also be used with "always" or "constantly" when you want to describe a repeated action that feels interesting, strange, annoying, or surprising.

Structure: Subject + is/am/are + always/constantly + verb(-ing)

Use this to express an emotional reaction — not just a neutral observation.

Examples:

- He is always asking me to help him with those tasks. (annoying / strange)
- She is constantly coming up with new feature ideas. (impressive / exhausting)
- They're always missing deadlines. (frustrating)

Compare:

Neutral (Present Simple)	Emotional (Present Continuous + always)
He asks me to help with tasks.	He is always asking me to help with tasks!
The client sends feedback every week.	The client is constantly sending feedback!
